12:40-2:00 p.m. • MUB Theater I

Sean Moore
Associate Professor of English
Talk (open to all):
Censorship and Freedom in Jonathan Swift’s Dublin and Today’s Developing World

With special guest
Leon Morse, IREX Deputy Director of the Democracy, Governance, and Media

Sean Moore, UNH Associate Professor of English received his doctorate in English from Duke University. His research and teaching is focused on postcolonial, economic, and book history approaches to Restoration and eighteenth-century literature, with a particular focus on the cultures of Ireland and the Anglophone Atlantic. His first monograph, Swift, the Book, and the Irish Financial Revolution: Satire and Sovereignty in Colonial Ireland (Johns Hopkins UP, 2010), won the 2010 Donald Murphy Prize for Distinguished First Book from the American Conference for Irish Studies. He is currently on leave as a Fellow at the American Antiquarian Society and Newport Mansions.

Joining professor Moore will be Leon Morse of IREX, deputy director of the Democracy, Governance, and Media Division and managing editor of the Media Sustainability Index. In the latter role, Morse is responsible for overseeing individual country studies, both in terms of scoring and content. His work with the Media Sustainability Index provides regional and global perspectives on the state of media development and press freedom, particularly in Africa, the Middle East, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia.
